Cookie Notice

We use cookies to help our website to function and to track how visitors use the website. We also use cookies to identify registered users when they log in, display their profile and allow them to access material in the member area.

What is a cookie?
Cookies are text files. They are held in your web browser or downloaded onto your computer’s hard drive. They contain information about your internet usage, like whether you have visited the website before. Most modern websites will use them: some are needed to make the website work properly, others personalise your experience and some help with understanding how people are using the site. You can find out more here.

What cookies do we use?
The Circles UK website uses session cookies. These are stored in temporary memory and are erased when you close your web browser. The session cookie is stored in temporary memory and is not retained after the browser is closed. These cookies do not collect information from your computer.

We also set cookies for registered users when they login so that we can identify them and display their profile information along with content they need to have access to.

Use a third party google cookie set from google analytics to track user behavior on our website, for example so we can see what pages are visited most often.

How do I turn off cookies?
You can change how cookies are stored on your machine by clicking the Tools menu on your web browser.

You will also have seen a pop-up on our website about cookies; you can use this to indicate that you don’t want us to use them.

This might impact on how the website functions a little.
